Comment [as1]: When the heck was this written?

The President of the United States
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20500

Comment [as2]: Who the heck is this letter for?

Mr. President:

At your request, I have prepared a list of cabinet members who should be invited to the upcoming meeting on the Energy Policy Act of 2005. It is my opinion that the Secretary of Energy, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Environmental Protection Agency Administrator should be asked to attend.

Comment [as3]: Why the heck is this person writing to me?

The Department of Energy promotes the use of energy sources that are reliable and friendly to the environment. Therefore, the Secretary of Energy should be able to tell you how much ethanol will be needed to meet the goals of the Energy Policy Act. He should also be able to provide you with information about other renewable fuels.

Comment [as4]: What the heck makes this person think the Secretary of Energy will have anything valuable to contribute to this meeting?

The Department of Agriculture works closely with farmers, so the Secretary of Agriculture should be able to give you an idea of how much corn is being grown, and whether it will be enough to meet the nation's need for ethanol.

Comment [as5]: What the heck makes this person think the Secretary of Agriculture will have anything valuable to contribute to this meeting?

Finally, the Environmental Protection Agency works to promote a cleaner, healthier environment. Therefore, the EPA Administrator should be an excellent source of information about the effects that the Energy Policy Act is having on the environment.

Comment [as6]: What the heck makes this person the EPA Administrator will have anything valuable to contribute to this meeting?

If this list meets with your approval, I will immediately contact these cabinet members and ask them to attend the meeting.

Comment [as7]: What the heck is this person expecting from me?

Sincerely,

Nancy Smithson
